

Two pound for pound candidates breezed through recent tests to maintain their spot on the list and the guy on the top still remains.

Manny Pacquiao heads the list of pound for pound champions for 2011, with a couple of newcomers, United Kingdom's Amir Khan and Mexico's Giovanni Segura, replacing Fernando Montiel and Ivan Calderon.

Khan's victory over Argentina's hard punching Marcos Maidana in the talented junior welterweight division places him on the list. Hopefully, Khan will be fighting fellow pound for pounder Timothy "Desert Storm" Bradley later this year.

The other newcomer is Segura, a junior flyweight from Acapulco, Mexico who powered his way to this list with impressive results. Forgive the comparison but he's a 21st century version of Puerto Rico's Wilfredo "Bazooka" Gomez.

Just a few days ago middleweight world champion Sergio Martinez showed why he deserves to be on this list and a few months ago bantamweight Nonito Donaire blew out fellow pound for pound fighter Fernando Montiel.

On May 7, Big Bear, California's Sugar Shane Mosley has a date with Pacquiao.

1. Manny Pacquiao (52-3-2, 38 KOs) – Pacquiao has been on a roll for quite a while. It's akin to Roy Jones Jr. who dominated for several years in the early 2000s. Next up is Sugar Shane Mosley. Pacman has slight advantages in speed and stamina but Mosley still has the power. Despite what many think Mosley matches up very well with Pacman. Can Pacman retire without another loss? He's on an incredible streak that may never be rivaled. And he still seems to be getting better even at 32. One of the reasons he's on top is that he never cheats himself while training. When Pacquiao enters the ring he's 100 percent ready to roll. Of all the fighters I've seen train there are only a handful that work at his rate of speed. One of them was the late Edwin Valero. Too bad we'll never see that fight happen.

2. Floyd Mayweather (41-0, 25 KOs) – It's been almost a year since "Money" Mayweather last entered the prize ring. With all of his problems in court it would be a major surprise if Mayweather jumps in the ring any sooner than August. If it were any other fighter there would be questions whether the layoff would erode his reflexes or skills. Mayweather, 34, never blows up in weight and still visits the gym regularly. When the judicial system is finally finished with "Money," expect to see his return.

Avila's Pound for Pound List 2011

Written by David A. Avila

Tuesday, 15 March 2011 19:23

3. Bernard Hopkins (51-5-1, 32 KOs) – Before Hopkins journeyed to Canada to fight Jean Pascal there were fans, fighters and promoters complaining about how the old guys keep clogging up the airwaves. More than a few said Hopkins was over-rated. Then he schooled Pascal on the art of boxing and here we go again. Hopkins will be fighting Pascal once more. Golden Boy Promotions won the purse bid and the fight will take place May 21st in Montreal. He truly is a master boxer even at age 46. He's wickedly wise in the ring.
4. Juan Manuel Marquez (51-5-1, 37 KOs) – The Mexico City warrior was supposed to fight Erik Morales in Las Vegas but that is now on hold. Because of boxing politics Marquez may leave Golden Boy Promotions (like Mosley) in order to fight Pacquiao later this year. Marquez, 37, may want to stay busy but he's in limbo at the moment. It's not a good place to be at his age. He was seen this past weekend at the Miguel Cotto vs. Ricardo Mayorga fight as a television analyst. He's trying to be careful not to destroy any chances of a rematch with Pacman.
5. Sergio Martinez (46-2-2, 25 KOs) – If there were any questions about Martinez's abilities he just crushed them like he crushed Ukraine's Sergiy Dinziruk last weekend. More than a few expected Martinez to experience a difficult time with the undefeated southpaw Dinziruk but that was clearly not the case. Martinez, 36, has developed a style all his own and actually seems to be getting better each fight. Can anybody in the 154 to 168 pound divisions beat the Argentine? The Oxnard-based boxer is becoming a phenomenon. He's also one of the nicest guys in the sport.
6. Timothy Bradley (26-0, 11 KOs) – Fans forget that Bradley has never been beaten as a professional. The Palm Springs Desert fighter continues to surprise critics and opponents with his ability to beat the odds. His convincing win over a solid champion in Devon Alexander adds another notch to his growing list of conquests. Next up for Bradley will be Amir Khan should he defeat Paul McCloskey in April. If that Khan fight happens, the world will see two of the quickest prizefighters on the planet. Slow-motion replays will be necessary for accurate judgment.
7. Robert Guerrero (28-1-1, 18 KOs) – The Ghost was last seen dominating Cuba's Joel Casamayor and beating a talented Vicente Escobedo. Very few can claim to have beaten the Cuban master so convincingly like Guerrero. Now the Gilroy prizefighter is moving up to the lightweight division to face Michael Katsidis. Guerrero continues to improve with every fight. His win over Jason Litzau was seen as ho hum. But Litzau toppled Celestino Caballero from the pound for pound list and also beat Rocky Juarez. Both Juan Manuel Marquez and Jorge Linares wanted no part of the Ghost. Who can blame them?
8. Nonito Donaire (25-1, 17 KOs) – When Donaire was penciled in to fight fellow pound for pound fighter Fernando Montiel of Mexico, it was expected to be a fearsome battle. Instead, it was another highlight clip for the ever dangerous Filipino Flash. It seems whenever Donaire faces a dangerous opponent, he slips into overdrive and annihilates them. Can anybody in the bantamweight division contend with Donaire? At the moment he's deciding whether to fight the winner of the bantamweight tournament or move up to fight one of the junior featherweight world champions.

Avila's Pound for Pound List 2011

Written by David A. Avila

Tuesday, 15 March 2011 19:23

9. Andre Ward (23-0, 13 KOs) – The Oakland-based prizefighter is beginning to make each fight look easy though it obviously is not. The list of quality wins is growing for the former Olympic gold medal winner. Ward's decisive wins over Edison Miranda, Mikkel Kessler, Sakio Bika and Allan Green prove that he may just be unbeatable as a super middleweight. He still has fights remaining in the tournament but right now it looks like he's the cream of the crop. No longer is he a runner, he's actually a well-rounded prizefighter now.

10. Amir Khan (18-0, 15 KOs) – Should Khan beat Paul McCloskey in April, it looks like the British speedster could meet Timothy Bradley in a mega junior welterweight battle in the summer. Can you imagine these two speedsters trading punches? Bradley and Khan are so fast it may be difficult for the fans to see the blows. The lanky Brit improves with every fight. Since joining forces with trainer Freddie Roach his defense has improved. He's well spoken and has slowly become a fan favorite in the U.S.

11. Giovanni Segura (26-1-1, 22 KOs) – Mexico's mini-bomber Segura showed how to beat former pound for pound fighter Ivan Calderon last summer and handed the Puerto Rican his first professional loss. Next month Segura meets Puerto Rico's Calderon once again but this time in Mexicali, Mexico. Segura has the footwork, hand speed and firepower to slow down Calderon's track shoes. He plans to move up in weight and show the flyweights what he can do. Expect more destruction.

12. Paul Williams (39-2, 27 KOs) – The one-punch knockout loss to Sergio Martinez may have been a good thing. Sometimes it's worse to take a beating round after round like Dzinziruk last weekend. Williams is only 29 and may have a lot left. Nobody knows until he steps back in the ring. Don't forget that he beat Winky Wright and that's not easy to do.

Honorable mention:

Abner Mares, Rafael Marquez, Wladimir Klitschko, Miguel Cotto, Lucian Bute, and Yuri Gamboa, Chad Dawson, Yuri Gamboa, Kelly Pavlik and Felix Sturm.

Fights on television

Fri. ESPN2. 6 p.m., Chris Avalos (18-1) vs. Yan Barthelemy (11-2).

Fri. Telemundo, 11:30 p.m., Dante Jardon (15-1) vs. Humberto Martinez (20-5-1).

Fri. Telefutura, 11:30 p.m., Luis Ramos (17-0) vs. Jose Hernandez (10-4-1).

Sat. Showtime, 10 p.m., Lucian Bute (27-0) vs. Brian Magee (34-3-1)

Comment on this article

Radam G says:

Largely ditto da TSS West Bureau Chiefy David Double-A P4P list. Holla!

Avila's Pound for Pound List 2011

Written by David A. Avila
Tuesday, 15 March 2011 19:23

donputo69 says:

Ugly List...Why scareweather is still there?...That clown hasnt fought since...uuuummmm....uuuuuummmm....I cant even remember....Heres my list: 1. Pacquiao...2. Martinez...3. Donaire...4. W.Klitschko...5. Cotto...6. Juanma...7. Bute...8. Khan...9. donputo69...10.Judah...Let the hate begin...Holla Back!!!

Editor Mike says:

I'd have me a coupla Klitschkos on my T10, I think...Don has Judah at 10!

donputo69 says:

@Mike...Lets give my boy Zab a shot...I rather have Zab at 10 than to have Scareweather and Hopkins 2 & 3....Lmfao...Also...I think maidana should get atleast a honorable nomination...Holla Back!!!

Condor says:

P4P is definitely in the eye of the beholder. Mayweather doesn't belong (inactivity) and Hopkins is way too high (Pascal scored two knockdowns; Hopkins failed to knock him out and take the judges out of the equation, something that a wickedly wise pugilist would have done). Donaire and Ward should be higher, and the Klitschkos at a minimum are top 10 (higher in my book, based on the definition of P4P).

MisterLee says:

1.) Pacquiao 2.) Donaire 3.) Martinez 4.) Bhop 5.) Andre Ward 6.) Juan Manual Marquez 7.) Timothy Bradley ...okay... throw in a couple K bros. in there.... i don't think Khan belongs. He's way too green, has many flaws, and has beaten: a boxer who can't punch (malig) and a puncher who can't box (maidana). Bradley will expose him. Holler!

MisterLee says:

Andre Ward 2011!

amayseng says:

as everyone is entitled to their own opinion i have no idea how floyd is in the top ten. first he beat a jmm who came up 2 div and floyd still didnt make weight, then he beat a 39 year old 16 month inactive shane, plus floyd hasnt fought in 11 months, shouldnt be on there.

1. sergi0---his last 4 opponents are more impressive and not weight drained compared to pacs, pac fighting clottey and marg took him out of this spot
2. pac
3. bernard
4. nonito

Written by David A. Avila
Tuesday, 15 March 2011 19:23

5. ward

im too tired to think of the next 5 hahaha

FighterforJC says:

Terrible list. It's all subjective, I understand, but one can only ignore dominance and cherrypicking/inactivity so much, as in why are the K-bros missing in the top 5, and how is Mayweather still #2? And why is B-Hop #3? So B-Hop managed to get dropped twice by Pascal, who isn't very good to begin with. That makes Hopkins #3? And how in the world is urine-drinking JMM ranked above Martinez? JMM has been feasting on corpses in the last two years. I'm surprised that Pacquiao made it in this top 10 list, let alone the #1 spot, considering its atrocity.

FighterforJC says:

[QUOTE=amayseng;4323]as everyone is entitled to their own opinion i have no idea how floyd is in the top ten. first he beat a jmm who came up 2 div and floyd still didnt make weight, then he beat a 39 year old 16 month inactive shane, plus floyd hasnt fought in 11 months, shouldnt be on there.

1. sergi0---his last 4 opponents are more impressive and not weight drained compared to pacs, pac fighting clottey and marg took him out of this spot
2. pac
3. bernard
4. nonito
5. ward

im too tired to think of the next 5 hahaha[/QUOTE]

Here we go again with the "weight drained" BS. Yep. Margarito, a lifelong 147 pounder who has fought maybe twice at 154, and all of a sudden he's weight drained when he gets to put on 3 extra pounds above 147 to fight Pacquiao? And how is fighting Clottey, one of the top 3 welters at the time detrimental to Pacquiao? In the meantime, Martinez puts a beating on a fighter no one's heard of before after knocking out the overrated, on-the-downhill Paul Williams against whom he struggled with in the first match, not to mention the HIGHLY competitive bout against Pavlik, who was beaten in a one-sided bout by Hopkins, and that makes Martinez more impressive? LOLLLLLL

amayseng says:

fighterJC dont get me wrong, im a huge pac fan, he is a stud, brings it, is exciting

i just dont think you can count the dlh fight because he was drained, and although

Avila's Pound for Pound List 2011

Written by David A. Avila
Tuesday, 15 March 2011 19:23

cotto is a stud i dont like how they had him come down a few lbs, and yes a few lbs is detrimental, even though pac beats him at 154...

marg didnt deserve the fight due to illegal complications but more importantly shane almost killed him then he was lackluster in a 10 round decision in mexico

pac is a stud, but these circumstances put his comp behind martinez is all admin says:

So in your mind how does Pacman move higher on your P4P list?

[QUOTE=amayseng;4329]fighterJC dont get me wrong, im a huge pac fan, he is a stud, brings it, is exciting

i just dont think you can count the dlh fight because he was drained, and although

cotto is a stud i dont like how they had him come down a few lbs, and yes a few lbs

is detrimental, even though pac beats him at 154...

marg didnt deserve the fight due to illegal complications but more importantly shane almost killed him then he was lackluster in a 10 round decision in mexico

pac is a stud, but these circumstances put his comp behind martinez is all[/QUOTE]

FighterforJC says:

Absolutely you can count the DLH fight. It was De la Hoya who pursued Pacquiao, not the other way around. DLH figured that the odds were heavily stacked in his favor with Pacquiao having to jump two weight classes after having had just one fight at lightweight. If DLH felt like he would be "weight drained" at 147, he should've challenged Pacquiao at at least 150. And as I've mentioned numerous times before which nobody seems to care about, if you recall the live broadcast, the commentators said that Freddie Roach was surprised by Pacquiao's official weight because Pac was about 3 to 4 pounds heavier on their own scale from their hotel room not too long before the official weigh in. That implies that the scales were tampered with in order for DLH to make the contracted weight. In reality, DLH came in a pound or two OVER the limit. Of course, HBO quickly realized their mistake and the implications of what they said and immediately covered up their mistake by stating later in that DLH supposedly reweighed himself on fight day, thereby validating the official weights from the day before. Cotto was the ONLY real "catchweight" fight for Pacquiao, and to this day, Cotto puts no blame on the weight. Pacquiao haters and Cotto fans ought to follow suit. And like I mentioned, how can you possibly consider Marg to be weight drained when he was allowed to put on 3 extra pounds? I could understand if Marg had been fighting at 154 for several years then having to drop down to 150, but was not the case. As for Martinez, his quality of opposition reeks. Paul Williams has been looking more and more average prior to the rematch with Martinez, practically ending all the speculation about Williams' mythical potential. Same with Pavlik, who was soundly whipped by Hopkins but managed to make the Martinez fight very competitive. And now we have the dzinzurik or however you spell that, who came out from under a rock. No, Martinez doesn't deserve to be in the top 3 let alone the top spot. The Klitschko bros have a far stronger claim for the #1 slot as they've been dominating for years.

Avila's Pound for Pound List 2011

Written by David A. Avila

Tuesday, 15 March 2011 19:23

amayseng says:

[QUOTE=FighterforJC;4333]Absolutely you can count the DLH fight. It was De la Hoya who pursued Pacquiao, not the other way around. DLH figured that the odds were heavily stacked in his favor with Pacquiao having to jump two weight classes after having had just one fight at lightweight. If DLH felt like he would be "weight drained" at 147, he should've challenged Pacquiao at at least 150. If the so-called experts were truly concerned about DLH's weight, they shouldn't have made him the 3 to 1 favorite over Pacquiao. And as I've mentioned numerous times before which nobody seems to care about, if you recall the live broadcast, the commentators said that Freddie Roach was surprised by Pacquiao's official weight because Pac was about 3 to 4 pounds heavier on their own scale from their hotel room not too long before the official weigh in. That implies that the scales were tampered with in order for DLH to make the contracted weight. In reality, DLH came in a pound or two OVER the limit. Of course, HBO quickly realized their mistake and the implications of what they said and immediately covered up their mistake by stating later in that DLH supposedly reweighed himself on fight day, thereby validating the official weights from the day before. Cotto was the ONLY real "catchweight" fight for Pacquiao, and to this day, Cotto puts no blame on the weight. Pacquiao haters and Cotto fans ought to follow suit. And like I mentioned, how can you possibly consider Marg to be weight drained when he was allowed to put on 3 extra pounds? I could understand if Marg had been fighting at 154 for several years then having to drop down to 150, but was not the case. As for Martinez, his quality of opposition reeks. Paul Williams has been looking more and more average prior to the rematch with Martinez, practically ending all the speculation about Williams' mythical potential. Same with Pavlik, who was soundly whipped by Hopkins but managed to make the Martinez fight very competitive. And now we have the dzinzurik or however you spell that, who came out from under a rock. No, Martinez doesn't deserve to be in the top 3 let alone the top spot. The Klitschko bros have a far stronger claim for the #1 slot as they've been dominating for years.[/QUOTE]

i did not mean to imply marg was weight drained in any way, but what i mean is that marg is damaged goods after shane, and had a poor, poor outing right before pac... pavlik got out classed by hop but pav did go up two weight classes...his power was irrelevant...still an excellent win for bhop doesnt matter if dlh challenged or pursued pac, that was a weight drained dlh, a very poor dlh therefore you cant put much measure on it..

Avila's Pound for Pound List 2011

Written by David A. Avila
Tuesday, 15 March 2011 19:23

pac did not fight a good version of dlh is all.
fact is fact.

i love pac, but i do have a problem with him getting a title at 154 when neither guy weighed in at 154....

how does that work?

FighterforJC says:

[QUOTE=amayseng;4334]i did not mean to imply marg was weight drained in any way, but what i mean is that marg is damaged goods after shane, and had a poor, poor outing right before pac...

pavlik got out classed by hop but pav did go up two weight classes...his power was irrelevant...still an excellent win for bhop

doesnt matter if dlh challenged or pursued pac, that was a weight drained dlh, a very poor dlh therefore you cant put much measure on it..

pac did not fight a good version of dlh is all.

fact is fact.

i love pac, but i do have a problem with him getting a title at 154 when neither guy weighed in at 154....

how does that work?[/QUOTE]

The same way it worked for Leonard vs Lalonde.

Isaiah says:

Ya'all musta forgot! It's #1)Sergio Martinez, #2)Manny Pacquiao, #3)Juan Manuel Marquez, #4)Bernard Hopkins #5)Nonito Donaire #6)Wladimir Klitschko #7)Timothy Bradley #8.)Fraud Bedwetter, I mean Floyd Mayweather (who can't even mention Martinez or Pacquiao's names without pi$$ing herself! LOL!) #9)Miguel Cotto and #10)Vitali Klitschko. What?! Did anyone think I was gone for good?! Shoot! I hurt the right hand and hit him with the left! Ya'all musta forgot! LOL!

Radam G says:

Enchantment of jive optical illusions and mass confusion is absolutely astounding! Hum! Sergio Martinez is the latest master of fooling those bandwagon jumpers that he is all that and a bag of chips. Humbugger Bullspittin' Organization -- HBO -- is darn GOOD! That broadcasting team is straight-up AWESOME! WTF! HBO has now convinced many fanfaronades that SM is now the most superbad pound-for-pound fighter on the planet. Max Kellerman, YA DA MAN! Apparently you can spit to these HBO fight fans that King Kong ain't nuffin' on Sergio Martinez. And SM is the latest version of the prime Superman Roy Jones Jr. It is all good, though! Max K has said many times that "Boxing is the theatre of the unexpected." So no one should unexpectedly be surprised of the latest HBO superhype who is so enchanted with boxing skills and speed that Da Manny, Da Money and even Da Miguel are trembling, hiding and now ducking this professional great amateurish fighter.

Avila's Pound for Pound List 2011

Written by David A. Avila

Tuesday, 15 March 2011 19:23

I guess da Don of fight promotions is right. "ONLY IN AMERICA! You beat a hyped-up long, tall bum; you cannot even knock out a drunk, who you get just before he goes to rehab; and then you get a television dance with a green European hyped-up softy, who's never fought in that weight division. You beat him like a yo-yo! Knock da down eight times, and it took you eight rounds to get rip of him. WTF! And now you are the superfighter, who all the superfighters are now SCARE of and cannot beat! Uncle Roger is RIGHT! Most people don't know syet 'bout boxin!" But it is all good. This is prizefighting, not knowing fighting! And beauty -- or is that fighty? -- is in the eyes of the beholder. Holla!