The main event showcases former super lightweight champion Devon Alexander (21-1, 13 KOs) from St. Louis in his quest to regain championship status. In his first fight since losing his title by a technical decision loss to Timothy Bradley in January, Alexander goes toe-to-toe with powerhouse Lucas Matthyse (28-1, 26 KOs) from Buenos Aries, Argentina in a scheduled 12-round 140-pound matchup.

The middle bout features undefeated light heavyweight titleholder Tavoris Cloud (22-0, 18 KOs) from Tallahassee, Fla. battling Yusaf Mack (29-3-2, 17 KOs), from Philadelphia and now living in New York City, in a scheduled 12-round title bout. Already holding one title, Cloud looks to challenge the other titleholders in the talented and experienced 175-pound division, but must face Mack before thinking about title unification.

Starting off the night, Bermame Stiverne (20-1-1, 19 KOs), from La Plaine, Haiti and now living in Las Vegas, makes his HBO debut against Cleveland veteran Ray Austin (28-5-4, 18 KOs) in a scheduled 12-round heavyweight contest.

Radam G says:

HBO has lost the funk, and is trying to steal it back from Showtime. But this card will not do it. There will not be a lot of excitement in any of these bouts. Biting off the words of da Don[puto69], "you heard it here first. Holla back, ladies!" Holla!

the Roast says:

Three fights, maybe one will be good? I can do without Ray Austin but a guy with 20 wins, 19 by KO is worth a look.

amayseng says:

looks to be a decent card....

altho showtime definitely has the upper hand the last year or two, plus showtime has much much much better commentary...

no?

K-9 vs. Powell should have gotten precedence over Ray Austin's fight and if Cloud wins his fight I hope he fights the Hopkins vs. Dawson winner. I was high on Alexander before I realized a couple of fights ago that he has a fundamental flaw; he doesn't sit down on his punches. However, he should throw enough pitty pat punches to out work Matthyse.

the Roast says:

I agree with Shoulder Roll. Show K-9-Powell.
