

RASKIN'S RANTS: The Real Winners & Losers Of Mares-Agbeko

Written by Eric Raskin
Sunday, 14 August 2011 22:05

---

If this life were fair, Russell Mora would be sentenced to about ten of those "bordeline" shots that Mares threw at Agbeko's groin and legs.

One of these days, we're going to get a highly entertaining fight that ends with one boxer winning deservedly, no controversy, nobody making excuses, nobody filing appeals. But until that day comes, we have fights like Abner Mares vs. Joseph Agbeko to discuss. This week's dip into the mini-mailbag asks a simple question that allows me to comment extensively on Saturday's action-packed but ultimately unsatisfying end to Showtime's bantamweight tournament:

Eric,

RASKIN'S RANTS: The Real Winners & Losers Of Mares-Agbeko

Written by Eric Raskin
Sunday, 14 August 2011 22:05

---

Jay Nady, Laurence Cole, and Arthur Mercante Jr. are like the Muhammad Ali, Joe Louis, and Jack Johnson of lousy refereeing, three absolute legends of sucking. But then there is Russell Mora, apparently the Buster Douglas of awful referees. He doesn't have a consistent track record of sucking to compete with a buffoon like Cole, but for one night, at the peak of his powers, nobody could touch him. This really might have been the worst single-fight performance by a ref I've ever seen.

Here's my question for you: There's a certain so-called boxing writer on a certain site you used to write for who reviews the weekend in boxing with incredibly lame and obvious picks for "biggest winner" and "biggest loser." (In the spirit of the last episode of Ring Theory, where you chose not to give sanctioning bodies or bad writers free publicity by stating their names, I won't state his name either. But I think you know who I'm talking about.) I can promise you right now, this "writer" will tell us Abner Mares is the big winner because he technically won the fight, and Joseph Agbeko is the big loser because he technically lost. So I'm turning to you to think more creatively and tell me who the big winners and losers from this fight REALLY were. Looking forward to what you come up with.

Thanks,
Alex

Alex,

Thanks for the email, it's an excellent set-up. I'd be more than happy to tell you who the real winners and losers from the Mares-Agbeko fight were:

BIGGEST WINNER: JOSEPH AGBEKO

Agbeko scored huge sympathy points, which sometimes carry a career farther than a simple "W" does. He also earned major respect points by battling through all the low blows and a slow start (I only gave him one of the first six rounds) to rally and do enough to earn the win had he not had the 11th-round knockdown call go against him and had Mares been penalized at least once or twice like he should have been. That 11th round alone might have been a four-point swing; two judges apparently ruled it 10-8 for Mares, but it should have been 10-8 for Agbeko. Bottom line: People will remember that Agbeko fought his ass off, and he'll be more popular than ever before on account of the fact that he got blatantly screwed.

BIGGEST LOSER: RUSSELL MORA

Not a whole lot of explanation needed here. This was the height of incompetence, compounded by a stubborn streak. When Mora was shown the slo-mo replay of the "knockdown" punch landing squarely on the cup, he was too pig-headedly defensive to earn back a measure of public support by saying, "Boy, you know, now that I see it in slo-mo, yep, that was a low blow. My mistake. I missed it." His behavior in the interview matched his behavior in the fight; he was locked into a singular mindset, and he just couldn't accept that it was the wrong one. The "Buster Douglas of awful referees," as you called him, should probably go eat himself into a

RASKIN'S RANTS: The Real Winners & Losers Of Mares-Agbeko

Written by Eric Raskin

Sunday, 14 August 2011 22:05

---

diabetic coma and come out of it in two or three years, when this has all blown over.

EVEN STEVEN: ABNER MARES

Mares' stock goes neither up nor down. He remains a definite top-five bantamweight who can't quite win definitively against other top-five bantamweights. He's an entertaining fighter, but we already knew that. I'd estimate he went low about 15 times over the course of the fight (a few of the shots the Showtime crew claimed were low appeared to me to be on the beltline), but he didn't seem to be fouling on purpose. He was just throwing one borderline shot after another and figuring, "If I'm not going to lose points for it, why stop?" You can't hold Mora's ineptitude against Mares. That said, you can't really call Mares a winner just because he got his hand raised.

OTHER WINNERS: JIM GRAY, AL BERNSTEIN, INSTANT REPLAY ADVOCATES

Gray is a winner because his boorish interview style was directed at the villain of the moment and therefore was well-received by the public for once. Bernstein is a winner because he (a) identified that Mora was blowing it very early in the proceedings, and (b) criticized him in a rational, even reluctant manner, coming off as the genuine pro that he is. And instant-replay advocates win because the 11th-round knockdown would have been easy to reverse between rounds if the powers-that-be in boxing would finally get into the 20th century—you know, now that we're 11 years into the 21st.

OTHER LOSERS: ADALAIDE BYRD & OREN SHELLENBERGER, BOXING FANS, OSCAR DE LA HOYA

Byrd and Shellenberger are mild losers for their slightly-too-wide 115-111 scorecards (though you could argue they're winners because Mora's atrocious officiating made their questionable scoring barely worth mentioning). The fans are losers because they got an unsatisfying result and because an attractive 118-pound opponent for Nonito Donaire failed to emerge (Donaire thumps either Mares or Agbeko). And De La Hoya is a loser for pulling the ol' tweet-n-delete with a disgusting comment about Showtime's broadcasters having bet on Agbeko. You would think after getting sued for slander once, Oscar might have learned his lesson. Not so much. Time to put child locks on that Twitter account, Richard.

That wraps up this week's mini-mailbag. Now here are a handful of bullet-pointed bloviations to get you through your Monday:

- Sure, I'm curious to hear what the investigators have to say about what they think really happened the night Arturo Gatti died. But mostly, I'm sad to be thinking about this again.
- Speaking of sad, what the hell happened to Kermit Cintron? It's not just that he seems to have hit the wall so suddenly and without a punishing fight to blame it on; it's that he's emerged as the least interesting fighter on the planet. As flawed as he always was, he used to be fun on several levels, whether he was landing sensational knockout blows, shaving the NBC peacock

RASKIN'S RANTS: The Real Winners & Losers Of Mares-Agbeko

Written by Eric Raskin

Sunday, 14 August 2011 22:05

---

into his hair, or even diving out of the ring like Mick Foley. Now he's just kinda hanging around. But, hey, it could be worse. He could be David Tua.

- I've been away from television access most Friday nights and Saturday mornings this summer, so I'm very thankful indeed for ESPN3.com. However, I can't begin to figure out how it's determined which clips the website is legally blocked from showing. This past Friday, they cut out Joe Tessitore's tribute to Scott LeDoux and the audio of an ESPN Radio interview. I would have thought ESPN-owned materials would be fair game. Then again, Lennox Lewis is currently on his second premium-cable broadcasting gig, so there's a lot I don't understand about this business.
- When a fighter goes down and Steve Smoger doesn't even start to count, you know it was a sensational punch. Dannie Williams made himself a prospect worth watching with a right hand that proved not all fighters named Antonio Cervantes are created equal.
- TBS' Lopez Tonight, a talk show that frequently welcomed boxers as guests, has been cancelled due to low ratings. The lesson: All of the Americans without senses of humor are already watching Jay Leno, making it hard for other unfunny hosts to attract an audience.
- Two things very much worth watching this coming weekend: the season finale of ESPN2 Friday Night Fights, with its outstanding short-notice main event of Demetrius Andrade vs. Grady Brewer; and the return of Alfredo Angulo, which will hopefully be viewable somewhere on the internet. Solid stuff as far as the mid-August doldrums go.
- This has nothing to do with boxing, but I'm positing the theory that The Situation's romantic affection for Snooki is an act, designed to get him more camera time this season after he slipped into a supporting role in Season Three. I'm also not going to rule out the possibility that Sitch went legally blind prior to the fourth season. (That would certainly explain why the normally image-obsessed Situation is suddenly allowing himself to appear on camera with a dead poodle stapled to his head.)
- Look for a new episode of Ring Theory (<http://ringtheory.podbean.com>) this week. I'm not sure yet what topics we'll be discussing, but I do know that you won't hear much talk from Bill Dettloff about the volume of his footsteps.

Eric Raskin can be contacted at RaskinBoxing@yahoo.com. You can follow him on Twitter @EricRaskin and listen to new episodes of his podcast, Ring Theory, at <http://ringtheory.podbean.com>.

Comment on this article

brownsugar says:

RASKIN'S RANTS: The Real Winners & Losers Of Mares-Agbeko

Written by Eric Raskin

Sunday, 14 August 2011 22:05

---

Agbeko displayed remarkable composure after receiving one of the most blatant cases of a home town decision I've ever seen. Mares seemed to start off in a gear that I've never witness from him before..... I picked Agbeko to win and was wondering by round 4 if I made the wrong choice..... Regarding the low blows... Agbeko did pull Mares head down on a few of those.... but by the 10th round we had counted 16 low blows landed by Mares... The and the ref still didn't take control..or inforce the rules....Mora made it worse as he spoke defiatly in denial during the post fight interview... If Mora had done his job correctly there might have been a different ending because the action was close...yet non-stop.... A rematch has to happen.

brownsugar says:

Danny Williams looked crisp and phenominal... although against a questionable opponent. Jack Loew is keeping his day job alive by enlisting such promising young talent. Can't wait to see how this kid looks when he steps up.

MisterLee says:

[url]<http://www.boxingtalk.com/pag/article.php?aid=21980>This writer counted 21, some others have counted 30+ low blows fo' sho! TSS rules! Holler at The Roast and Smiley C!

MisterLee says:

[url]http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=X\_FT\_kc0wyY&feature=player\_embedded#at=268Great video on Mares!

brownsugar says:

I read some article where the writer said he saw 55 low blows... wow.