LOS ANGELES (August 10, 2011) – He came, he sang, he recorded. Congressman MANNY “Pacman” PACQUIAO, boxing’s No. 1 pound for pound fighter

inside

the ring is becoming a hit machine

outside the ring. His remake of the Dan Hill

-penned hit,

Sometimes When We Touch

, which was released on April 28, cracked the Top-10 this week, landing at

No. 7

on the Secondary Adult Contemporary Chart as measured by the Friday Morning Quarterback Album Report (FMQB.) As it has throughout its run, remains a Top-Five most-added song on radio station playlists this week.

“Manny leaping from No. 11 to No. 7 on the Adult Contemporary secondary charts reminds us once more that there’s nothing this man/boxer/congressman/singer is not capable of,” said Dan Hill.

“I’m so proud to call him my friend and a major life inspiration.”

“What a man!” exclaimed Hall of Fame promoter Bob Arum. “A champion in the boxing ring, in politics, now as a singer -- what next for amazing Manny?”

Hill first reached out to Pacquiao after watching the Fighter of the Decade perform Sometimes When We Touch

on

Jimmy Kimmel Live

in his U.S. network TV debut on November 3, 2009.

Last October, weeks before his astonishing 12-round unanimous decision victory over Antonio Margarito where he won the vacant WBC super welterweight championship, his record eighth world title in as many weight divisions, Pacquiao interspersed his training at World-Famous Freddie Roach's Wild Card Boxing Club with sessions in a Hollywood studio to record the unforgettable iconic ballad Sometimes When We Touch with the same production team that brought the song to the top of the charts in 1977. With songwriter and original singer Hill in his corner, and producers

Matthew

McCauley

and F

red Mollin

, Pacquiao delivered a passionate performance that showed the warmth and courage in the boxer's heart.
