Kimmel, the self-proclaimed "lucky rabbit's foot" of Pacman, has had the Filipino icon on his show before every fight for nearly three years, dating back to his successful challenge of then-WBO welterweight champion Miguel Cotto, which also marked Pacquiao's late night network television debut. It was on that night that Pacquiao unveiled his singing chops, belting out a rendition of the Dan Hill-penned hit ballad "Sometimes When We Touch," a song Hill and Pacquiao later remade. The single rose to No. 7 on the Secondary Adult Contemporary Chart as measured by the Friday Morning Quarterback Album Report (FMQB), where it spent four weeks in the Top-10 last summer.

Radam G says:

SCLA Ali, stream forward and make some sense. Money May, who you enjoy riding on his tiny nut sack, clearly tweeted that he 100 percent agree with Prez O. So maybe you better make some sense and quit holding onto Money May's ___ ___ ___ ___! If I'm "GAY," he's triple that and support that lifestyle -- by his admission.

Money May is my BOY! I just luv dat son of Pops Joy. And so do you love him, SCLA Ali. So just hit hatin!' And enjoy the ride. Hehehe! Holla!
