Dallas has dedicated the bout to his late father, Mike Dallas, Sr. He has been gruelingly training with Virgil Hunter to prepare for the 30-year-old Matthyse, who was anointed with the interim WBC Light Welterweight Championship belt after beating the undefeated Ajose Olusegun (30-1, 14 KOs) by technical knockout last September.

Nicknamed "The Silent Assassin," Dallas has incorporated power with his excellent boxing skills and his persistence in wearing down his opponents, which may prove requisite in defeating Matthyse, who has lost his only two bouts by decision.

Dallas isn't overcomplicating his approach to the fight as the game plan is mapped out by Hunter the 2011 Trainer of the Year. His plan of attack is to remain true to his style of boxing, speed and quickness.

"I'm just going to be myself and box and take advantage of openings," the Bakersfield, Calif. native said. "I'll do what I've been taught to do and force him to have to make the adjustments as the fight goes on. I'm just going to be smart and fast."

"I truly believe that Mike can defy the odds against Matthyse," said Dallas promoter Dan Goossen of Goossen Tutor Promotions. "Fights against the likes of Josesito Lopez and Mauricio Herrera, which I thought he won, prepare you for these opportunities."

The Matthsse vs. Dallas fight is being promoted by Golden Boy Promotions in association with Arano Box Promotions and Goossen Tutor Promotions.

Radam G says:

My deepest condolences to MD Jr. I missed the news some how of MD Sr passing. May he be granted every great and fun thing of the afterworld of this topsy turvy one.

As far as MD Jr's bout, unless trainer Virgil Hunter have tricks that I don't know about, Matthyse should win this dance. Maybe by stoppage. Holla!
