

DiBella on Boxing: "It's A Dirty Business"

Written by Michael Woods
Thursday, 25 April 2013 00:00

The fight game can suck you in, make you an addict, and then, if you stay in long enough, or maybe too long, you can begin to find elements of it repellant. The high diminishes, you feel the hangover longer, harder. For promoter Lou DiBella, the romance curdles awhile aback, and he now struggles with the darker sides of the sport. Check out this mini-documentary by film-maker

DiBella on Boxing: "It's A Dirty Business"

Written by Michael Woods
Thursday, 25 April 2013 00:00

John James, in which DiBella, the Harvard-educated New York based deal-maker who used to run HBO's boxing programming and now finds himself contemplating an exit from the business which he finds makes him long for copious cleansing showers, vocalizes his disaffection.

It's short, and powerful.

<http://www.particlemg.com/no-way-out>

{loadposition lou_bibella_no_way_out}

Comment on this article

deepwater says:

DiBella on Boxing: "It's A Dirty Business"

Written by Michael Woods

Thursday, 25 April 2013 00:00

That was the first true thing ole cockeye has said in a while