

Canelo Alvarez Is Talented But...A BIG But...

Written by Ron Borges

Friday, 13 September 2013 22:07

LAS VEGAS – The tub thumpers and the suits have been insisting for weeks now that tonight's showdown between Floyd Mayweather, Jr. and Saul "Canelo" Alvarez is the biggest event in boxing in years. For accounting purposes it would appear they may be right, but based on what?

According to Richard Schaefer, CEO of Golden Boy Promotions, several thousand seats have been added inside the MGM Grand Garden Arena, thus pushing the record live gate to $20,003,151, and while the pay-per-view sales may not eclipse the record set by Mayweather and Oscar De La Hoya of 2,552,566 million buys seven years ago, tonight's fight could well eclipse the all-time pay-per-view sales number of $137.5 million even if it doesn't approach the actual sales of De La Hoya-Mayweather. As "Money" Mayweather has pointed out, "That's what we're counting and that's the point."

With HD costing $74.95 and constituting about 60% of the total buys if the fight approaches the all-time record it could gross upwards of $180 million according to the fight's promoters and even if it hovers more in the range of 1.5 million to 1.8 million buys it could still eclipse the gross sales number from Mayweather-De La Hoya. What this all shows you is the power of constant marketing by CBS, SHOWTIME and across internet platforms and all forms of social media.

If the public is told often enough that something is, as SHOWTIME Sports head Stephen Espinoza said on Wednesday, "the biggest fight in boxing history" people who have never heard of Ali-Frazier I or Leonard-Hearns or The Rumble in The June begin to believe it but from a fistic point of view what can possibly lead you to such a conclusion?

Mayweather is admittedly the best pound-for-pound fighter in the world, an undefeated champion who has won eight world titles in five different weight classes and defeated 16 world champions and at 36 has shown little signs of slippage.

Canelo Alvarez Is Talented But...A BIG But...

Written by Ron Borges

Friday, 13 September 2013 22:07

So for this to actually be “the biggest fight in boxing history” if we are looking at it as an actual fight rather than a TV show we must consider young Alvarez. Certainly he is wildly popular in Mexico, both because of his style and success in the ring (42-0-1, 30 KO) and his unusual carrot top hair that led to his being called “Canelo” (Spanish for cinnamon). His good looks, relentless style and those red locks have combined to turn him into a phenomenon there, yet when one closely considers his record, what do we find? Frankly, nothing to justify a record live gate or new marks for pay-per-view sales.

This is not to dismiss him, because Alvarez is a talented young man with reasonable punching power and the ability to throw a body shot that can cave your ribs in. Yet when one looks at his list of recent opponents there is nothing to suggest he belongs in the same ring with Mayweather, at least not in so heavily hyped an event.

Since winning the WBC junior middleweight title two years ago, Alvarez has fought seven times going the distance against Matthew Hatton, an utterly shot Shane Mosley and a light hitting discounted version of Mayweather named Austin Trout.

He also stopped Ryan Rhodes (who?), reality TV boxer Alfonso Gomez, thread bare Kermit Cintron and a blown up 140 pounder named Josesito Lopez. That resume led Mayweather to remark during the week that if one does their homework they can come to but one conclusion about how this will all play out – which is to say badly for Canelo Alvarez.

“I fought Miguel Cotto,” Mayweather said. “He fought Miguel Cotto’s brother. I fought Ricky Hatton. He fought Ricky Hatton’s brother. He’s fighting Floyd Mayweather. He’s not fighting Floyd Mayweather’s brother. If he fought 42 Floyd Mayweathers he wouldn’t be 42-0. He’d be 0-42.”

The stark logic of Mayweather’s assessment of Alvarez’s resume is undeniable. One can of course argue that until a young fighter beats a top level opponent question marks will always exist and there is little he can do about them until his moment comes as Alvarez’s will tonight. But is such an unproven fighter ready for the kind of challenge Mayweather provides?

Canelo Alvarez Is Talented But...A BIG But...

Written by Ron Borges

Friday, 13 September 2013 22:07

Frankly, there is little reason to believe so.

Ricky Hatton was the last undefeated fighter to face Mayweather. He was 43-0 at the time with significant wins over Jose Luis Castillo, who had once given Mayweather the closest fight of his life, and future Hall of Famer Kostya Tszyu. Soon after the first bell sounded Hatton learned his "0" meant nothing once he was across the ring from Mayweather, who stopped him in the 10th round six years ago.

Alvarez says he has studied that fight closely and claims he has learned from Hatton's mistakes. He had best hope so.

"I've seen what he did," Alvarez said. "He kept coming in and pressuring Floyd and throwing a lot of punches but I felt he kept coming in a little too open. He was getting caught with many punches coming in, especially the right hand and, obviously, finally with the left hook that got him out of there. He made mistakes coming in wide open."

They are mistakes Canelo Alvarez says he will avoid but everyone says that until they find themselves in with Mayweather and being asked questions for which they have no answers.

By then, of course, the money will be in, the stands will be full and millions of people worldwide will have settled in to watch a fight they will not see because they never looked past the hype.

How different Alvarez may not yet know. Compared to Mayweather his resume is uninspiring. That he is skilled is clear and no one would argue who has the superior power but against Mayweather none of those attributes have made a difference in the past because he is indeed different. The question Saul Alvarez must answer tonight is: how different?

Comment on this article

amayseng says:

This is preposterous, just ridiculous. this is NOT the biggest boxing event of all time, or even the

Canelo Alvarez Is Talented But...A BIG But...

Written by Ron Borges

Friday, 13 September 2013 22:07

last ten years.

*, mayweather vs DLH was a bigger event.

just because inflation will result in a higher number doesnt mean its a bigger event or more anticipated. i can think of many off the top of my head which had more buzz and intrigue..

dlh chavez I dlh trinidad
dlh mosley
pac dlh hagler leonard hagler hearsns
duran leonard leornard hearsns
tyson holyfield.
ali frazier 1.2.3.
ali foreman
ali vs anyone

the only reason they fell this bout is so popular is because they keep telling it is so popular.
im a hardcore fan but im not an idiot.

this is all about manipulation through marketing.
even the nazis had their own country behind them....

Grimm says:

Exactly. I read somewhere that during a Joe Louis-bout - can't remember witch - an aircraft with US soldiers on its way to Europe circled above the East Coast just so they could all listen to the broadcast from the fight. THAT was big, in a time when boxing mattered and had impact thru all layers of society.

Depicting a magnitude can create an illusion of magnitude, even if this - of course - IS a big fight in its own.

amayseng says:

[QUOTE=Grimm;36551]Exactly. I read somewhere that during a Joe Louis-bout - can't remember witch - an aircraft with US soldiers on its way to Europe circled above the East Coast just so they could all listen to the broadcast from the fight. THAT was big, in a time when boxing mattered and had impact thru all layers of society.

[B]Depicting a magnitude can create an illusion of magnitude, even if this - of course - IS a big

Canelo Alvarez Is Talented But...A BIG But...

Written by Ron Borges

Friday, 13 September 2013 22:07

fight in its own.[/QUOTE][B]

exactly

amayseng says:

[QUOTE=Grimm;36551]Exactly. I read somewhere that during a Joe Louis-bout - can't remember which - an aircraft with US soldiers on its way to Europe circled above the East Coast just so they could all listen to the broadcast from the fight. THAT was big, in a time when boxing mattered and had impact thru all layers of society.

[B]Depicting a magnitude can create an illusion of magnitude, even if this - of course - IS a big fight in its own.[/QUOTE][B]

exactly

bigstinkybug says:

[COLOR="#800000">

*cuz u walk around at 150 pounds doesn't make u a welterwt... people look at me with a glazed look, then I stop there..I've short-circuited something in their head. May has to eat burgers just to make weight... Canelo is hungry and will be all the way till the fight... Canelo walks around at 175 ... advantage Canelo

*May is faster... many say speed kills power, and that's a myth. Canelo is also fast and not a plodding power puncher. when u have a smaller guy who's faster going agans't a bigger guy who's more powerful, who do u go for? POWER. I don't think May will be able to keep Canelo honest. Canelo will go in like a king goes into a peasants house and takes what he wants... and there's nothing May can do about it.

*36 vs 22yrs old. of course we're talking a remarkable 36 yr old.. but still, a 36 yr old. May could hit Canelo with everything...and the kitchen sink, and he won't KO Canelo. May stands a great chance of breaking his hand in this one cuz Canelo is gunna make him fight. just like May is a remarkable at 36yr old, Canelo is ALSO remarkable at 22yrs. we've seen Mays best... the best of Canelo is yet to come.

*who's more worried...? Canelo looks pissed off eveytime I see him. On all aces, the lady tried talking to May about Canelo's sparring partners breaking down and May lost it. "muther fuker, i'm no sparring partner"...lol . Canelo says"ill do my talking in the ring"

* Canelo wins a UD in this one.. and hurts May a couple of times in the process... may even knock him down. Canelo is a beast and should come out like one... in the end, we'll know the winner before the scores r called out.[/COLOR]

kingfor1000yrs says:

Canelo Alvarez Is Talented But...A BIG But...

Written by Ron Borges
Friday, 13 September 2013 22:07

Yep Max Schmelling, us vs Germany

leon30001 says:

What's even more ridiculous is that on another site one of the writers is wondering aloud whether a win for Floyd might just cement his status as the GOAT!

amayseng says:

[QUOTE=leon30001;36556]What's even more ridiculous is that on another site one of the writers is wondering aloud whether a win for Floyd might just cement his status as the GOAT![/QUOTE]

that writer has lost all credibility

Radam G says:

Dang! Wang! Hang! Bang! Sang! Bigstinkybug can straight-up write. Wow! Nice stuff, my man! I don't see it that way, but NICE weaving and heaving! TSS may gonna have to holla at you to be its beat reporter in the Lone Star State. You've been rocking and socking with you keyboard tapping, lately. Holla!

brownbomber says:

[QUOTE=Radam G;36563]Dang! Wang! Hang! Bang! Sang! Bigstinkybug can straight-up write. Wow! Nice stuff, my man! I don't see it that way, but NICE weaving and heaving! TSS may gonna have to holla at you to be its beat reporter in the Lone Star State. You've been rocking and socking with you keyboard tapping, lately. Holla![/QUOTE]

Thx for the pics!!

Hop says:

I already posted about how ridiculous it was for Oscar to say, as he did, that this fight was going to be [B][I][SIZE=3]"the best in the history of the sport"[/SIZE][/I]/B (!!). To my surprise many defended Oscar by saying that he was a promoter. So what? You can talk about how exciting you think a fight will or could be without insulting people's intelligence with such obvious, dumb hype. It was [B]nowhere near[/B] the best in boxing's history -- not in the top 250.

kingfor1000yrs says:

The undercard will steal the show just like the last Mayweather ppv